Tuition Rising: Annotated Bibliography

Bruce Bueno de Mesquita. Is High College Tuition Defensible?. 2011. Youtube.com. Web. 8 Nov. 2012.

The Video gives information about a professor's point of view on the subject and how they got through school with low subsidies and free schooling due to less demand when he was attending school. This shows the other side of the argument.

In the video, "Is High College Tuition Defensible?", Bruce Bueno states the different reasons for high tuition costs. He states the many reasons why high tuition rates are justified by showing ways to get college paid for. He states that there low interest loans and scholarships help out a large percentage of students. He also states that demand is high and therefore colleges must compete with private institutions in order to have a better student body and be more attractive to prospecting students. Bruce Bueno is a Professor at Hoover Institution which gives him some credibility. The source video itself was uploaded in 2011 meaning that it is current. From viewing Bruce's opinion, he seems to not be in touch with current college students since he has not felt the burden of tuition hurting his wallet.

Bruce Beuno pointed out several logical and reasonable reasons for college tuition increasing at such a high rate. However he does not seem to be in touch with people of the generations that have to deal with such high costs of books, living, tuition and inflation. The video will be good to use simply because it shows that the reasoning of tuition rates being so high is not credible.

Ronald Ehrenberg. "Industrial and Labor Relations and Economics." Course Article. Dept. of Economics, Cornell University, Harvard University Press. Web. 8 Nov. 2012

The topic within this article was the rising costs of tuition. It gave reasons supporting the cause of tuition rise; as well as the perspective of someone having to explain costs and sources that are provided by the government.

In Ronald Ehrenberg's article, "Tuition Rising: Why College Costs so Much", he explains the reasons behind tuition rates rising at such a high rate. He provides evidence and brings into perspective a schools reasoning for what has been influencing tuition rates to be so high. It shows such reasons ranging from demand of nicer and updated institutes to cuts in funding from government. The article also points out negligent spending and the failure of higher education institutes addressing these known problems. Overall it is to show that colleges have many factors in raising tuition costs and fees, yet acknowledges the fact that some negligent spending is part of the reason for the increases.

The author establishes his credibility by showing that he is making it a scholarly article. Under his name it shows that he is representing Cornell University. Yet he does not show his authority. The article seems to be credible by also crediting its sources for numbers and information of statistics. It shows that the information is from known and governed institutions. And it came up as the top search for Google on the subject.

This source has valuable information for the topic of my research paper. It shows statistics, as well as information on why the costs of higher education has increased thus pointing out the view and reasoning for educational facilities to increase tuition. It will be used within my essay to show the other side's argument and to gain statistical information on the topic.

"Tuition Costs, Treasury Official Says". WSJ Blogs, Real time Economics. Wall Street Journal.

Web. 8 Nov. 2012

In the Article, "Tuition Costs, Treasury Official Says", it mentions tuition being a financial burden on already economically hurt families. It quotes statements from the Treasury Department which shows that higher education creates a better economy. It also states that, "tuition makes up 40 percent of revenue", for educational institutions. The Assistant Secretary for economic policy, Jan Eberly, said that it is a growing problem and will not help to create economic mobility as families will continue to feel the pressure on their finances.

This article seems to be credible due to its authority. It has statements from professional individuals who are experts in the field of economics. It also provides stats from the department of education.

The article is recent because it was published on July 31, 2012. It is a blog site which contains the article yet it was published in the Wall Street Journal which seems to be a credible source.

The source will help provide evidence of growing concern from authoritative individuals within the treasury. It will also help provide some statistics that could be used to support my argument.

The article was published on the Wall Street Journal's web page, meaning that it is a credible source for attaining information on the subject.

Engkilterra, Shad. "Students to Face Three to Six Percent Tuition Increase". The Globe Online., Mar. 14, 2012. Web. Nov. 21, 2012.

This article gave information on how tuition is increased. It gave information about Utah Higher Education funding. And how the legislature can affect tuition increases. The source provides detailed information on how tuition is determined and points out those who are in charge of tuition increases.

The article was published in March of this same year; which makes it current. It is reliable because it gives statements from credible sources. The source is somewhat biased due to it being written by a SLCC student. They are a reliable source to get information from because they do provide facts and statements made by the Vice President of Student Services. It was out of a periodical published online mainly targeted towards Salt Lake Community College Students and Faculty.

It will be highly useful in the conclusion of my research paper because it offers detailed information about the tuition system at Salt Lake Community College and others that are in the same district.
